

Bonee' Lynette Harden

The Unseen of The World

Acrylic on Canvas

This piece is taking place in a sky full of clouds and within that sky there is a huge crack in it where inside it shows the true colors of the world. In the center are warm colorful colors and from top to bottom and all around it's filled with dark colors representing the darkness that is in the world. Think of this as a spiritual realm or portal where when you look into it you are looking through a clear lens so clear you see what you wouldn't see before.

To think of everything that as happened in 2020 from the covid-19 virus from huge protesting events for the Black Lives Matter movement where police and other racist people would still to this day brutally beat, murder, rape, and mistreat people of color and specifically black people. This connects to my art piece because even through all these tragic events there are always people in the world who carry the light and then there are people who carry darkness but still the light will always win and as you can see light colors win and dark does not. We as people have made it to 2021 and as there is still darkness around us we need to be strong and work together as we carry the light for as long as we can.